Q. No. 2

Read the following passage and tick (✓) the correct answer to the given questions:

Teaching about compassion and empathy in schools can help deal with problems of climate change and environmental degradation,” says Barbara Maas, secretary, Standing Committee for Environment and Conservation, International Buddhist Confederation (IBC). She was in New Delhi to participate in the IBC’s governing council meeting, December 10-11, 2017. “We started an awareness campaign in the year 2005-2006 with H H The Dalai Lama when we learnt that tiger skins were being traded in China and Tibet. At that time, I was not a Buddhist, I wrote to the Dalai Lama asking him to say that ‘this is harmful’ and he wrote back to say, “We will stop this.” He used very strong words during the Kalachakra in 2006, when he said, ‘If he sees people wearing fur and skins, he doesn’t feel like living. ‘This sent huge shock waves in the Himalayan community. Within six months, in Lhasa, people ripped the fur trim of their tubba, the traditional Tibetan dress.

The messenger was ideal and the audience was receptive,” says Maas who is a conservationist. She has studied the battered fox’s behavioral ecology in Serengeti, Africa. She heads the endangered species conservation at the Nature and Biodiversity Conservation Union (NABU) International Foundation for Nature, Berlin. “I met Samdhong Rinpoche, The Karmapa, HH the Dalai Lama and Geshe Lhakdor and I thought, if by being a Buddhist, you become like this, I am going for it,” says Maas, who led the IBC initiative for including the Buddhist perspective to the global discourse on climate change by presenting the statement, ‘The Time to Act is Now: a Buddhist Declaration on Climate Change,’ at COP21 in Paris.

“It was for the first time in the history of Buddhism that leaders of different sanghas came together to take a stand on anything! The statement lists a couple of important things: the first is that we amass things that we don’t need, there is overpopulation, we need to live with contentment and deal with each other and the environment with love and compassion,” elaborates Maas. She is an ardent advocate of a vegan diet because “consuming meat and milk globally contributes more to climate change than all “transport in the world.”

Turning vegetarian or vegan usually requires complete change of perspective before one gives up eating their favorite food. What are the Buddhist ways to bring about this kind of change at the individual level? “To change our behavior, Buddhism is an ideal vehicle, it made me a more contented person,” says Maas, who grew up in Germany, as a sausage chomping, meat-loving individual. She says, “If I can change, so can anybody”.

2.1 According to the passage, how can studying compassion and empathy in schools help?

- a. It can help us understand and connect Buddhism.
- b. It can help deal with problems of climate change and environmental degradation.
- c. It can change our behaviours and make us more content person.

d. It can help us in turning vegetarian.

2.2 Why is Ms. Barbara an ardent follower of vegan diet?

- a. She believes that “consuming meat and milk contributes more to climate change than all transport in the world”.
- b. She believes that “turning vegan gives your skin an unmatched glow and helps you stay away from diseases”.
- c. She believes that “all living beings should be treated with love and compassion”.
- d. She believes that “abstinence helps you win major battles of life”.

2.3 What did HH Dalai Lama say to his followers which came as a blow to them?

- a. He said “we need to live with contentment and deal with each other and the environment with love and compassion”.
- b. He said that if he sees people wearing fur and skins, he doesn’t feel like living.
- c. He said Buddhism is an ideal vehicle; it makes people more contented.
- d. He said “we need to live with contentment and deal with each other and the environment with love and compassion”.

2.4 According to the passage, what do you infer from “The messenger was ideal and the audience was receptive”?

- a. It means that the audience found the messenger attractive and that they wanted to listen to him more and more.
- b. It means that audience’s reaction goes hand in hand with speaker’s effectiveness.
- c. It means that HH Dalai Lama was a perfect choice of the messenger for the message to be received by the audience.
- d. It means that messenger was tested and was working properly.

2.5 Why did Ms. Barbara Mass say “If I can change, so can anybody”?

- a. She never wanted to change but she still did, so anyone else can.
- b. She was a complete vegan but still turned non vegetarian.
- c. She did not believe in Buddhism but the religion attracted her.
- d. She grew up eating non vegetarian but turned vegan.
